Resident Of the Month

-Les Fowler-

I was born in 1941, the son of a sharecropper on a cotton farm in the Mississippi Delta, later surviving a war, a revolution, and 9/11 before joining my Alders family.

My neighbors don't know about the struggle for survival in the early years before we made our escape to Texas. They don't know that I celebrated my birthday in a village in Viet Nam the night before the Tet Offensive. My neighbors would never guess that I, with my wife and three small sons, fled Iran in January 1979, dodging roadblocks and screaming protestors. The neighbors have no reason to know about my greatest fear and narrow escape while working on a project in Yanbu, Saudi Arabia on September 11, 2001. Neighbors don't communicate much anymore.

There is one person in my neighborhood who knows all of these stories, and more. When we moved to Texas in 1957, Robert lived next door and we graduated high school together. Robert can tell you that I earned a BA in English and a MS in Counseling and became a teacher, marriage and family therapist, and international consultant. He knows how I faced the challenges of raising two gay sons in a very conservative environment in the eighties and that my youngest son was a soloist for the New York City Ballet. Given that I have repeatedly told the story about having an intimate birthday dinner with Natalie Portman in Paris, Robert can probably repeat this story verbatim.

Very few people know about the brutal attack I witnessed as a six-year-old when a white man attacked a Black man with a hammer and how that horrific scene forever influenced my views on the evils of racism. Not even I know what conversations my grandfather Kent had with Mississippi John Hurt, the legendary blues singer and guitar player. I know that I was the only person to have seen a camel ballet in the Saudi Arabian desert. Despite having taught hundreds of adults over the years, the best students I ever had were the village elders in Qui Nhon, Viet Nam. My story hasn't ended...yet.
